First-Year Students & Libraries: Assessing The Impact Of Information Literacy Tuesday, March 26 ~ 3:00- 4:30pm (Eastern)

Once the live date has passed, this training will be available on demand.

Overview

Both community college and four year institutions have traditions of working with instructors needing Library instruction, and this tradition has created an atmosphere of both faculty and students requiring true understanding of Information Literacy. Various Colleges in Texas, including North Lake College, Southern Methodist University, and the University of Texas at Dallas, have placed careful emphasis on the discovery of information, the understanding of how information is produced and valued, and the use of information in creating new knowledge. Items such as the difference between high school "reports" and college "research" papers often confound the first year student, and information literacy plays a key role in that student's understandings and expectations as they relate to the assessment. These Information Literacy programs are more than a class; they are a journey in educating the first year student in developing and refine search strategies, as well as managing and organizing searching processes and results. Instructor are charged with educating the first-year student on what is expected from them as college students, and with this process in place the faculty can be assured that the assessment process will have a clear outcome, as well as clean and clear documentation.

Join us to learn how early and continued exposure to the academic library and all of its resources will increase academic preparedness and college readiness. Participants will also learn how to measure the effectiveness of library instruction as it relates to the first-year student and acquire the knowledge and resources needed to assist students to achieve academic and career success.

Objectives:

- Understand how early and continued exposure to the academic library and Information Literacy and all of its resources will increase academic preparedness, degree understanding, and the steps necessary to achieve overall college readiness
- Be able to understand and measure the effectiveness of Library Instruction as it relates to the first-year student by analyzing the participants against their course successes, as well as their readiness for greater academic challenges
- Leave this presentation with the knowledge and resources needed (and presently used) to help students achieve academic and eventually career success

First-Year Students & Libraries: Assessing The Impact Of Information Literacy

Tuesday, March 26 ~ 3:00- 4:30pm (Eastern)

Speaker(s)

Kent Seaver, Director of Learning Resources

North Lake College - Irving, Texas

"All students can think, but the ability to think critically opens up more doors academically, as well as professionally."

Kent Seaver has 20 years of experience in the field of student assessment, prior learning and learning resources. At the community college level he has enjoyed success in relating the importance of usage of information literacy to traditional college students, home school students, transfer students, and returning student veterans. He is presently the Director of Academic Operations at the University of Texas at Dallas for the Jindal School of Management. In that role he has worked diligently to ensure that student success is a top priority in terms of completion, including but not limited to alumni and student mentoring, assessment impact, as well as core program needs. Kent has researched the impact of information literacy has on the current landscape of higher education, as well as the work force placement impacts and advising successes related to their educational requirements. Kent has written articles dealing with student success and retention for the American Technical Education Association, AACRAO, NACADA and Military Advanced Education.
